Ms. Amy Moore, Principal Planner/Planning and Development Services Department and Mr. John Sherrer, Director of Preservation/Historic Columbia shared data from Catalyst for Columbia, the 2023 study that showcases the impact of historic preservation on the City's economic health. The collective impact is found in four main areas: jobs, investment, tourism venues, and property value growth. Findings from the study reinforce the importance of historic preservation for the City's economy and confirms that preserving Columbia's architectural heritage is an informed, strategic investment in the future. Impacts from Bailey Bill projects include $217 million in investments; 102 local jobs annually; $5.2 million in annual labor income; and an additional $15 spent in qualifying rehabilitation for every $1 of required investment. In 2022, heritage tourism resulted in over two million overnight visitors. May is Preservation Month and the Historic Columbia Foundation will lead an awareness campaign about the study.

PRESENTATIONS

1. One Columbia Update - Mr. Xavier Blake, Executive Director

Mr. Xavier Blake, One Columbia Executive Director provided an update on One Columbia's operations. One Columbia's tech theatre program trains 12-15 local high school students in stage management, sound, lighting, and set design. This six-week job creation program provides students with a stipend, lunch, weekly field trips to local venues and a resume. The Central Carolina Community Foundation and the Arts Commission fully funded this year's program. He also highlighted the expansion of funding sources; the local arts designation allowing for more options; and the collaborative efforts with the Poet Laureate of Columbia, Ms. Jennifer Boykin.

There was discussion about commissioned poems and potential readings at City Council meetings.

Ms. Pamela Zelijak, Public Arts Administrator for One Columbia said since last year, four public art projects have been completed. Using a grant from the Knight Foundation, One Columbia hired a public art intern and a public artist in residence. The artist in residence receives a stipend for the year. The artist in residence wants to work with the mental health community and her project will be an expression of that work. The public art intern is conducting maintenance checks on all of the art in the collection. There are pieces that are owned by the City and some may be privately owned.

There was discussion about developer awareness of public art opportunities; artist selection; comparable cities; public art funds; art vandalism; and changes in property ownership and property owner agreements.
